

Wednesday Morning.

13 July 2, 1845.

My Dear Friend:

It is settlement day with me for another quarter of the year, and I find myself in the same predicament (owing to the non-payment of a debt of $50 due me from another) that I was at the previous quarter. As I am anxious to keep my credit good with my landlord, &c., if you can loan me $50 (fifty) till the expiration of the present month, when I shall receive my monthly stipend, you will greatly oblige me.

It may happen to be quite inconvenient for you to do so.
In that case, I will apply elsewhere.

Yours, truly,
Wm. Lloyd Garrison.

Should it be convenient
to make the loan, I will hand
you a receipt for the same when I see you. I am very busy to-day at my office:
have not been well for several days past.
